

A Child like Callum

An AMBER Music Award has enabled ten-year-old Callum, who has severe sight problems, to take ukelele lessons. He is racing ahead learning all sorts of tunes and melodies, becoming more and more confident and louder at singing, and now looks up rather than looking down at the floor.

Callum's music teacher says:

"Callum is a pleasure to teach and our lessons together are never dull! I feel that Callum's self-esteem is helped by his musical activities. A born performer, Callum has a legitimate outlet for his energies through music. He has very supportive parents. His dad sits in on the lessons, which is something I enjoy and find to be a great help."

Recently, Callum played at a local Living History WW1 event, where he played extremely well. He really seems to enjoy performing. Callum's mother says:

"Once again thank you for supporting Callum and ourselves by supplying him with his lessons.

We appreciate it a great deal as he gets real enjoyment from them."