

Why he needs your help

Jamie's father left home when he was only 2 weeks old and, although his mother does everything she possibly can for her son, she herself is unwell and cannot return to work. She knows how important music is to Jamie and how much The AMBER Trust means to children like him. For Jamie to continue to flourish and perhaps become a professional musician one day, he needs your support to carry on with his piano lessons, and to learn Braille music.

Jamie the singer

Jamie loves to sing and has an amazing voice with great volume, but because of his autism he sometimes gets a little over-enthusiastic and sings too loudly. Singing lessons help to control the loudness of his voice, as well as his singing technique.

Jamie the composer

Jamie is also fascinated with the technical side of music and likes to compose, arrange and play his own music. Constantly recording and re-recording on the computer and on CDs, he loves to put on his own shows for his mother and friends. To become an accomplished musician, he would benefit from being given and taught professionally how to use Sibelius music software, which is designed to help musicians like Jamie write, play, print and publish musical works of their own.